The Celtics have won 12 straight games and have the best record in the NBA. The Patriots have won five games in a row and are set for another Super Bowl push. Things are good in Boston sports. Staying with the Celtics, they've had young studs like Jaylen Brown and Jayson Tatum come up huge recently. Brown, in particular, has opened eyes around the NBA, and the sky is the limit for him. He's so tantalizing, that we could be looking at the next Kobe Bryant — seriously. For more, check out page 19 and metro.us.

ANOTHER ROY MOORE ACCUSER STEPS FORWARD

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell led a chorus of establishment Republicans on Monday urging Roy Moore, the party's Senate candidate in Alabama, to quit the race as a fifth woman came forward with allegations Moore had sexual contact with teenage girls decades ago. Beverly Young Nelson said Moore sexually assaulted her when she was 16 and he was a prosecuting attorney in his 30s. At a New York news conference, the tearful Nelson said Moore groped her, tried to pull her shirt off and shove her head in his lap, then warned that "no one will believe you" if she told anyone. "I was twisting and struggling and begging him to stop," said Nelson, a waitress at an Alabama restaurant where Moore often ate when the incident occurred. "I had tears running down my face." For more, see page 8.

QUAKE HITS IRAQ, IRAN, KILLING MORE THAN 450

Thousands of homeless Iranians huddled against the cold late on Monday, a day after at least 450 people were killed in Iran's deadliest earthquake in more than a decade, state TV said. Rescue teams kept up search operations for dozens trapped beneath the rubble of collapsed houses in towns and villages in the mountainous area of the western province of Kermanshah that borders Iraq. Iran's English-language Press TV said more than 450 people were killed and 7,000 were injured when the magnitude 7.3 earthquake jolted the country on Sunday. Local officials expected the death toll to climb as search and rescue teams reached remote areas of Iran. The quake was felt in several provinces of Iran but the hardest hit province was Kermanshah.

HATE CRIMES RISE FOR SECOND STRAIGHT YEAR

4 The number of hate crimes committed in the United States rose in 2016 for the second consecutive year, with African-Americans, Jews and Muslims targeted in many of the incidents, the FBI said on Monday in an annual report. There were 6,121 hate crime incidents recorded last year, an almost 5 percent rise from 2015 and a 10 percent increase from 2014, the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Hate Crimes Statistics report said. It did not give a reason for the rise. Black Americans were targeted in about half the 3,489 incidents based on race, ethnicity or ancestry, the report said, followed by whites who were targeted in 720. About half the 1,273 incidents that involved religion were against Jews. Muslims were targeted in 307 religion-based crimes, up 19 percent from 2015 and double the number in 2014.

ESPN 'SPORTSCENTER' SHOW ON SNAPCHAT

5 Sports broadcaster ESPN launched its flagship "SportsCenter" program on messaging app Snapchat on Monday, reimagining the show that provides sports highlights and commentary into a short-form series. The new show deepens the relationship between ESPN parent Walt Disney Co. and Snapchat parent Snap Inc. The sports network, which has made Snapchat content since 2015, is trying to reach a younger audience, while the social media app, whose messages disappear after viewing, is adding more content in an effort to grow its user base beyond its core youth demographic. The partnership is a two-year deal and Snap and ESPN will share revenues, Snap said, though it declined to give specifics. "SportsCenter" will air twice a day on Snapchat during weekdays, and once a day on weekends.

Boston Theater Company bridges gap between actors and athletes

Though the two worlds have always seemed separate, group's artistic director sees a lot of similarities.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Artists and athletes are often seen as occupying separate worlds, but to Joey Frangieh, there are a lot of similarities between the two.

Frangieh is the artistic director of the Boston Theater Company. Though he was never really an athlete — he was always the last to finish running the mile in middle school, he said — he recently ran the Boston Marathon.

That experience inspired him to help bridge the divide between the art and athletic worlds. Frangieh just launched the Artist Athletic Association (AAA), an initiative by the Boston Theater Company to bring together creators and competitors.

"My whole life, I was told, 'you're not athletic, you're a creator, you're artistic, it's fine, go do that,'" he said. "When I was thinking about what it takes to be an artist, an actor — you're constantly training your voices, bodies and minds. You can't take a sick day when you're an artist, and you can't do that as an athlete either. I felt like the similarities between artists and athletes are very, very strong."

Frangieh was inspired to run the marathon because of a play Boston Theater Company did called Finish Line, which told the stories of the Boston Marathon bombing survivors in their own words.

While researching for that play, Frangieh met some "incredible people," he said, like those injured as spectators who ran the marathon the next year, and was inspired to go for it.

"The approach of committing to something, working toward something bigger than you, not taking excuses, training your mind and body, waking up early and stretching, doing research for rehearsal that day — preparing [for either a play or a marathon] feels exactly the same," he said.

Plus, he noted, everyone can enjoy the benefits of working out. He wished he'd gotten into athletics sooner, but the super-masculine stereotype of the athletic world was intimidating.

Creatives are joining the Boston Theater Company's Artist Athletic Association to dispel stereotypes about artists and athletes. PROVIDED BY BOSTON THEATER COMPANY

Through AAA, he hopes to make that world more accessible and to show budding theater kids they can be athletic, too. They don't have to just fit in one box.

AAA, to Frangieh, is "a group of artists and also supporters of the arts who believe in teamwork, in dedication and commitment and the mission is to promote health and healthiness through physical activity, while breaking down the stereotype of what it means to be an athlete."

Seven AAA members will run the Cambridge Half Marathon this Sunday, and 14 others from the group will volunteer at the race's water stops. They're running under the team name "The Lupones of Patti" to honor the Broadway diva.

> "You can't take a sick day when you're an artist, and you can't do that as an athlete either. I felt like the similarities between artists and athletes are very, very strong."
> Joey Frangieh

"When you look at the Cambridge Half Marathon, you expect to see a lot of people in Nike sports outfits, super athletic," Frangieh said, "and then you'll see seven people in bright-pink shirts with Patti's face run by. It shows you don't have to fit in. We're going to do sports our own way."

Politician's plan to serve as mayor and state representative 'incredibly insulting,' Baker says

A state representative's plan to keep his job in the Legislature while also serving as the mayor of Attleboro is "insulting" to voters and his colleagues, according to Gov. Charlie Baker.

"I think it's incredibly insulting to the voters and to the mayors and to the legislators who take their job as a full-time job seriously, that he would even consider this," Baker told WCVB's "On the Record" during an interview that aired Sunday.

The News Service reported last Wednesday that Attleboro's mayor-elect, Democrat Rep. Paul Heroux, plans to serve out the remaining 14 months of his term in the House even after taking over at City Hall, in part to give his party a better chance at holding the House seat.

Heroux also told the News Service he wants to "finish some of the projects I started" in the Legislature and doesn't want his city to have to pay the $50,000 he said it would cost to hold a special election.

"I know people are going to criticize me, 'Oh, he's getting two salaries.' That's true, but I'm also doing two jobs," Heroux said.

"Rep. Heroux's decision to be a part-time mayor for shallow, political reasons is wrong for the people of Attleboro, who deserve full-time service," MassGOP spokesman Terry MacCormack shot back a day later. "It's hard to imagine anything more disrespectful to taxpayers than Beacon Hill Democrats' massive pay hike, but Heroux's decision to provide part-time, subpar service while collecting two taxpayer-funded salaries is an even worse failure of leadership."

Heroux did not respond to News Service requests for comment Sunday and Monday morning.

During the campaign, Heroux criticized Attleboro Mayor Kevin Dumas as overpaid at a salary of $122,000 a year and said if elected he would commission a study to determine how much he should earn as mayor, the Attleboro Sun Chronicle reported in August. As a state rep, Heroux receives base pay of $62,548 and is entitled to an additional $15,000 for office expenses.

Both MacCormack and Baker noted former Rep. William Lantigua in 2010 aborted his plan to serve in the Legislature and as mayor of Lawrence after he won the mayor's post.

Rep. Paul Heroux was elected as Attleboro mayor but says he will stay on the Legislature, as well. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

"I don't think people in public life should have two jobs," Baker said on "On the Record."

Saying he hasn't taken a vacation since a 2015 trip to Turkey, Heroux said the position of state representative is a "full-time job that fluctuates," and there is overlap between his duties as state legislator and his duties as mayor. He said, "I don't have a family so I can do it." STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Head of state police retires after allegations of altered police report

Gov. Charlie Baker announced that he's investigating the Massachusetts State Police arrest report protocol in light of the incident.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Massachusetts State Police Superintendent Col. Richard McKeon is retiring amid accusations that he ordered a trooper to remove embarrassing details from an arrest report for a state judge's daughter.

McKeon, who was appointed to head the state police by Gov. Charlie Baker in 2015, announced his retirement on Friday, effective Nov. 17. An announcement regarding his successor is expected in the coming days, according to the department.

His retirement comes after Trooper Ryan Sceviour filed a lawsuit in federal court on Nov. 7 claiming that he was improperly ordered to alter a police report.

Sceviour responded to a car crash on Oct. 16 in Worcester, according to the suit, per the Associated Press, and arrested the female driver after she allegedly failed the field sobriety tests. She also indicated that she had a heroin addiction, according to the suit.

That woman was the daughter of a Massachusetts Trial Court judge, Sceviour says in the suit, and he claims that he was "disciplined" at state police barracks following the arrest. Sceviour was then told, the AP reports, to remove references to the judge from the arrest report. The details later removed per those orders included statements made by the defendant that her father was a judge and would be furious with her, and that she would perform sexual acts for leniency and had done so to obtain drugs in the past.

McKeon announced his retirement one day after Baker said he was investigating the incident.

A second trooper is also suing the state police over the incident. Trooper Ali Rei filed the federal lawsuit on Friday, according to the AP, which reported that she said she was ordered to "shred and redact reports containing crude statements made by the judge's daughter."

"We have always been highly scrutinized for how we perform our duties, as any police agency should be, and these last few days have been no exception," McKeon said in his retirement letter sent to fellow officers and Public Safety Secretary Daniel Bennett. "That public examination, while sometimes uncomfortable, comes with the great authority bestowed upon us."

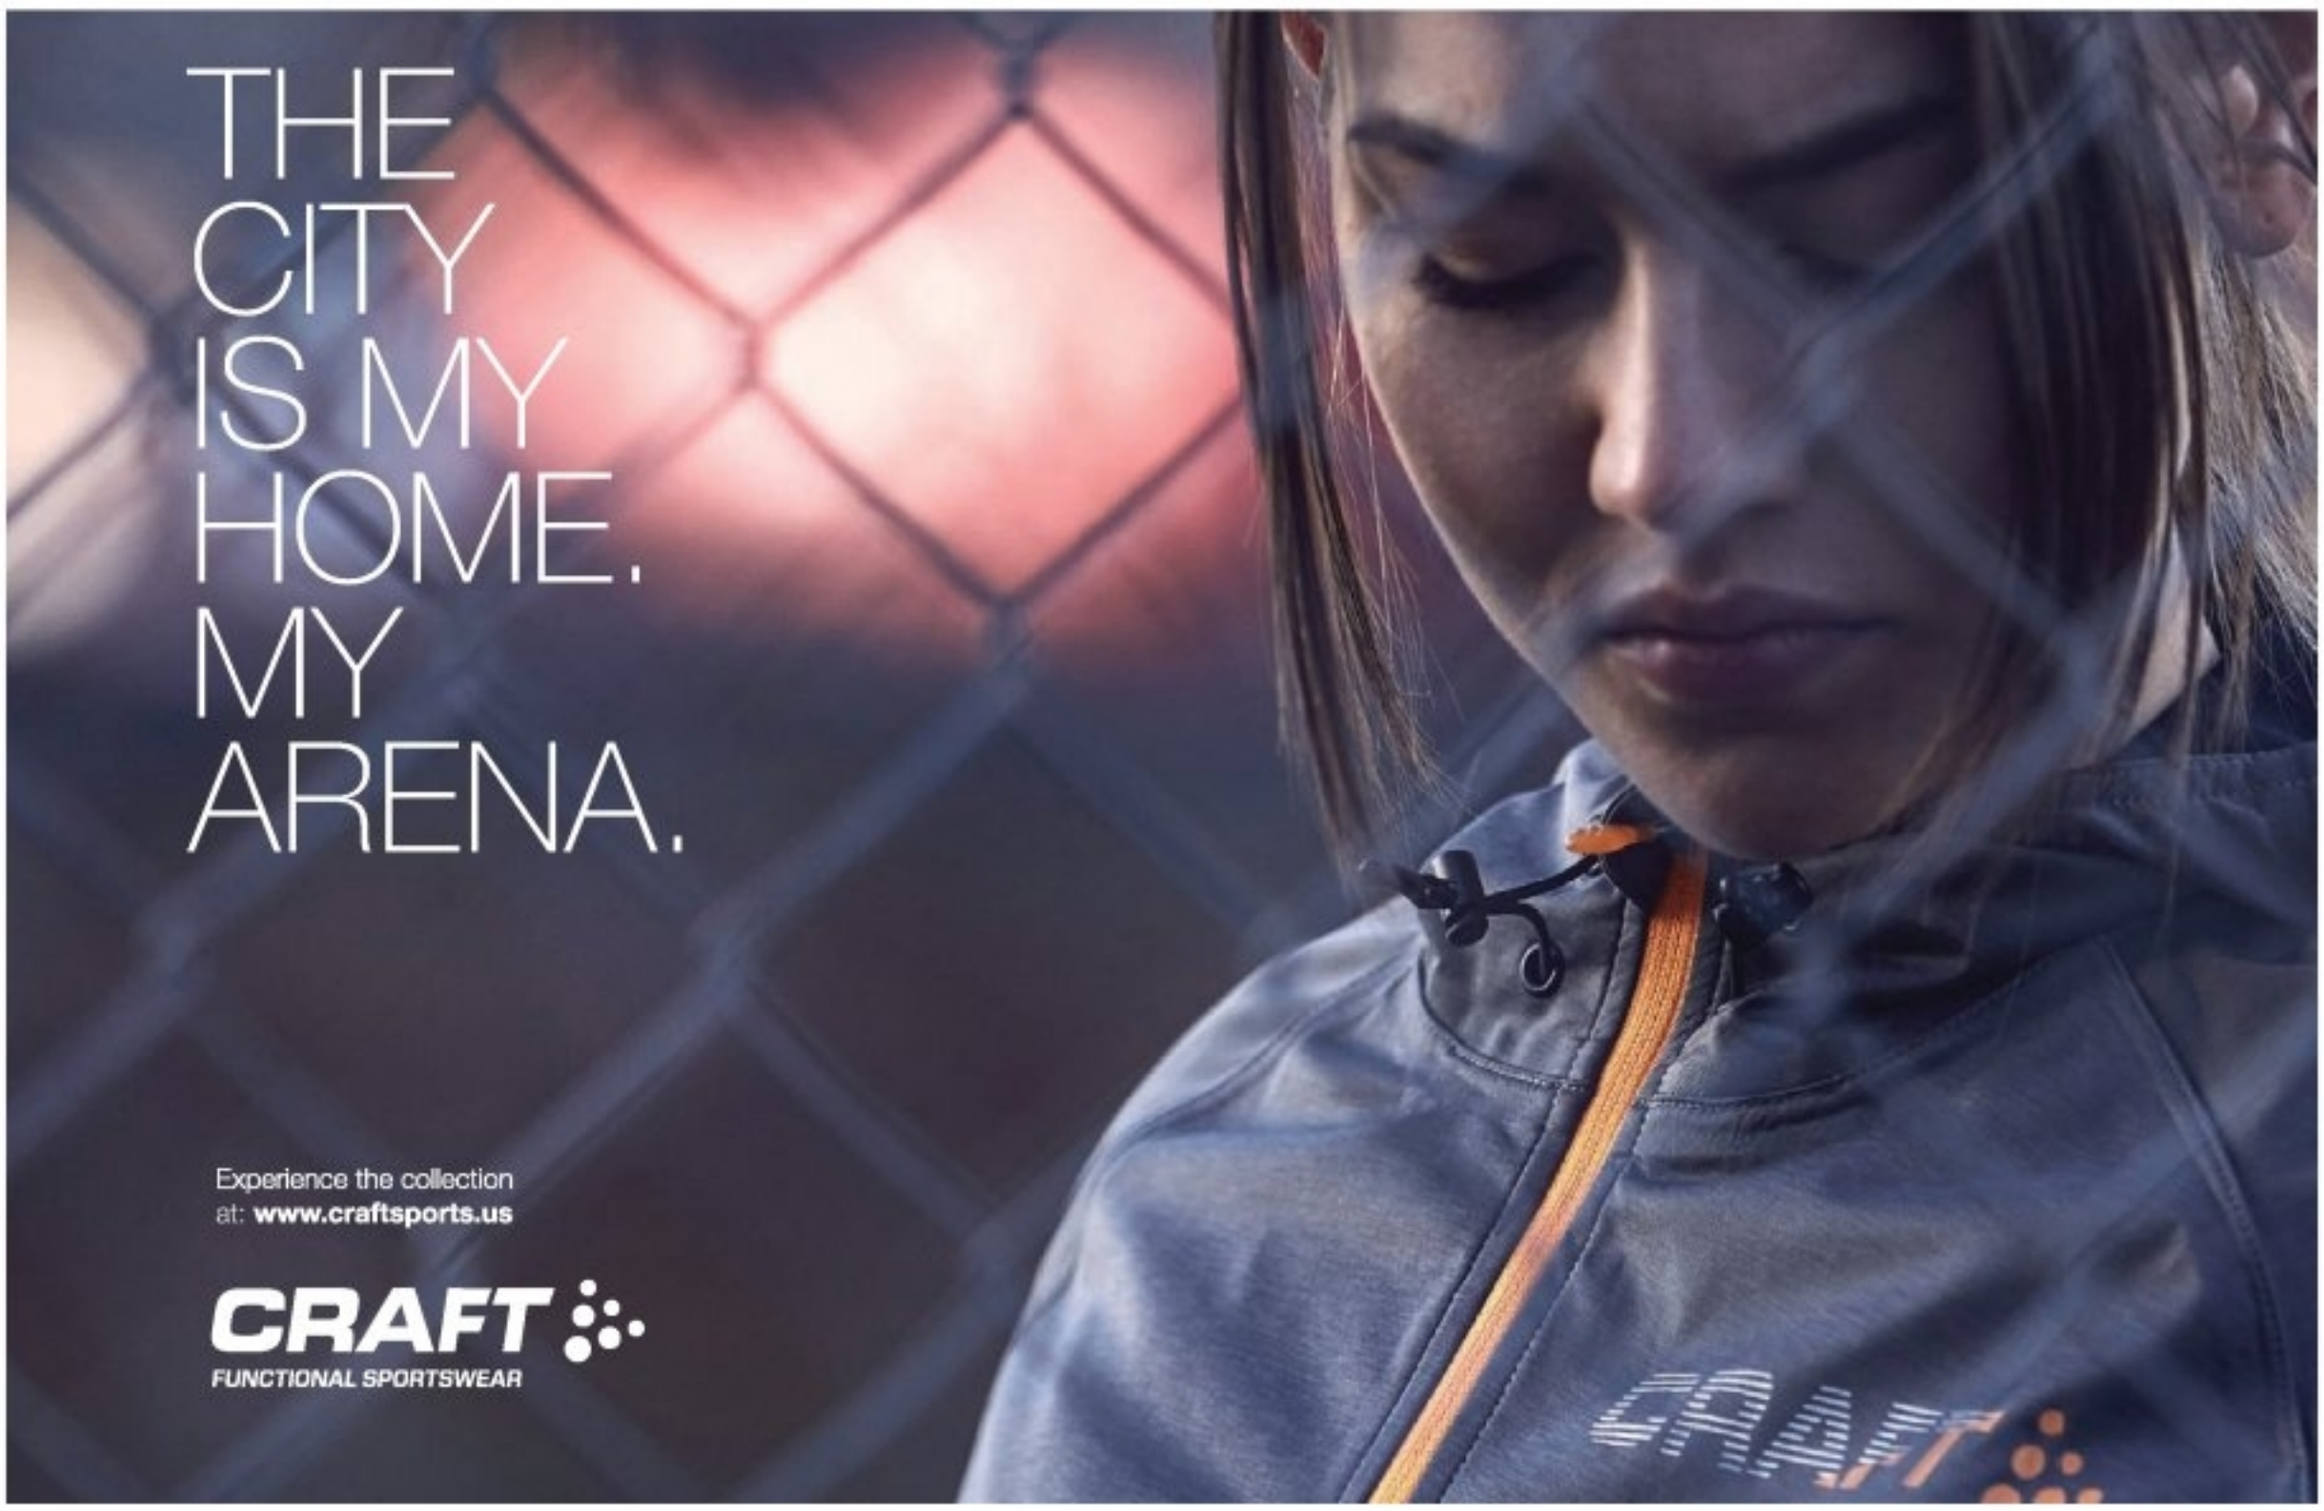
At the center of this incident is Alli Bibaud, daughter of Judge Timothy Bibaud, a trial judge in Dudley District Court.

"Part of our code of honor is understanding when your own personal ambition detracts from the greater good of our mission," McKeon's letter read. "I have today decided that putting the greater good of the Massachusetts State Police first necessitates my decision to retire after 35 years of proud service."

Baker thanked McKeon in a statement.

"The governor believes that Col. McKeon made a mistake by getting involved in the Bibaud case and has ordered the state police to examine procedures for the review of arrest reports," spokeswoman Lizzy Guyton said. "Gov. Baker recognizes the motivation to protect those with substance use disorders from potentially embarrassing information contained in their public records and expects the courts to hold the defendant accountable for all charges stemming from this incident."

State House News Service contributed to this report.



Puerto Rico requests $94.4 billion from US Congress for rebuilding

Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rossello on Monday requested $94.4 billion from Congress to rebuild the island's infrastructure, housing, schools and hospitals devastated by Hurricane Maria.

"This is a conservative estimate based on similar efforts that have been done in New York, New Jersey and of course in Texas most recently," Rossello said at a press conference streamed online from the National Governors Association in Washington.

"Now, I am however confident that we have turned a corner. That we are now flowing out of the life sustainment phase and we are starting the recovery phase, and the rebuilding phase," Rossello said.

In a letter to President Donald Trump, Rossello said recovery from the storm, the worst hurricane to hit the U.S. commonwealth in 90 years, exceeded the resources of the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Disaster Relief Fund and associated programs.

At the top of priorities is $31.1 billion for housing, followed by $17.8 billion to rebuild and make more resilient the power grid.

Puerto Rico Resident Commissioner to the U.S. Congress Jenniffer González-Colón accompanied Rossello and said she introduced legislation to reform the disaster relief law known as the Stafford Act.

The reform would allow disaster-recovery money to be used to modernize infrastructure, not just return it to recent condition. Puerto Rico's infrastructure was already weak.

Power line poles were downed by the passing of Hurricane Maria lie on a street last week in San Juan, Puerto Rico.
GETTY IMAGES

Restoring the power grid has been a top priority since Maria's 150 mph winds knocked it out completely on Sept. 20.

Rossello and the island's power authority, PREPA, were criticized for a no-bid contract with a tiny private firm, Whitefish Energy, for a portion of the repairs. Rossello canceled the contract on Oct. 29 after an uproar over its provisions.

On Monday, a U.S. federal judge rejected a request by the federally appointed Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico to install a former military officer to oversee PREPA, a victory for Rossello, whose government opposed the appointment.

The U.S. Department of Energy's latest readings indicate 47.8 percent of power capacity has been restored.

Puerto Rico's economy was already in recession before Maria landed and its government filed for bankruptcy in the face of $120 billion in debt and pension liabilities.

Rossello said the decisions Congress takes now will define "how successful we are in rebuilding Puerto Rico." REUTERS

Roy Moore threatens to sue Washington Post over sexual misconduct reports

Some of the reports include allegations of sexual misconduct with a 14-year-old girl when he was 32.

LENYON WHITAKER
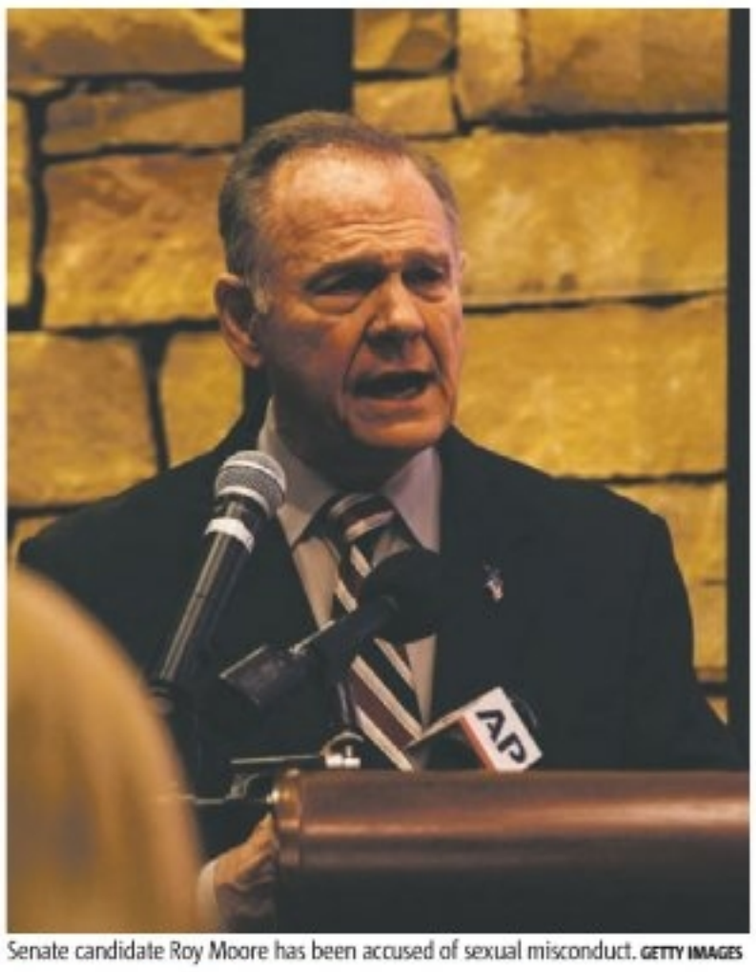
letters@metro.us



Senate candidate Roy Moore has been accused of sexual misconduct. GETTY IMAGES

Alabama Republican Senate candidate Roy Moore says he plans to sue The Washington Post over their report alleging he was involved with sexual relationships with teenagers when he was in his 30s working as an assistant prosecutor. One of the allegations includes a sexual encounter with a 14-year-old girl when Moore was 32.

During a campaign event Sunday night in Huntsville, Alabama, Moore addressed the reported allegations during a speech, saying it was an attack on his campaign.

"The Washington Post published another attack on my character and reputation because they are desperate to stop my political campaign. These attacks said I was with a minor child and are false and untrue – and for which they will be sued," Moore said.

Since The Washington Post reported the allegations against him, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said Moore should quit his senatorial bid after the allegations of him having sexual contact with a 14-year-old. "I believe the women, yes," McConnell said to reporters Monday in Kentucky. "I think he should step aside."

"I believe the women. ... I think he should step aside."

Sen. McConnell, on Roy Moore

During an interview on "Meet The Press," Republican Sen. Pat Toomey has also suggested Moore should step down.

"You know, this is a terrible situation, nearly 40-year-old allegation, we'll probably never know for sure exactly what happened," Toomey said. "But from my point of view, you know, I have to say, I think the accusations have more credibility than the denial. I think it would be best if Roy would just step aside, he added."

Since the allegations were reported, several women including Katie Couric, Sarah Silverman and Alyssa Milano are responding to Moore's allegations by posting photos of themselves as teenagers to show the world what it looks like to be 14 and are using the hashtag #MeAt14 on Twitter.

Leigh Corfman was 14 years old when she said she met Moore. Corfman and her mother were in court for a custody hearing when Roy Moore introduced himself. According to Corfman, Moore started a conversation with them and offered to watch Corfman while her mother went inside for the hearing.

According to Corfman, Moore, 32, asked Corfman for her phone number. A few days later, Moore picked her up near her house and drove her to his house and told her how pretty she was and kissed her. On another visit, Corfman says he took off her shirt and touched her through her underclothes while guiding her hands to touch him through his.

Moore told Sean Hannity on his radio show that he did know Corfman but denies there was any sexual misconduct with her or any other woman.

During a Veterans Day event Saturday, Moore called all the allegations "fake news," according to CNN. He added by saying there are ongoing "investigations" to uncover the motives of The Washington Post and the truth will come out in the next few days.

This is how likely it is you'll have a heart attack during sex

Under 1 percent of people studied experienced sudden cardiac arrest during (or immediately after) sexual activity. GETTY IMAGES/ISTOCKPHOTO

It doesn't tax our tickers as much as we think.

MEAGAN MORRIS
letters@metro.us

Some potential sexual partners might promise heart-stopping sex if you slip between the sheets with them, but a new study shows that's probably not going to happen.

Jokes aside, the risk of sudden cardiac arrest and death is a concern for people with heart disease — including during sex — but the chances are "extremely low," according to senior study author Dr. Sumeet Chugh, medical director of the Heart Rhythm Center at the Cedars-Sinai Heart Institute in Los Angeles.

For the study, researchers analyzed data from 4,500 people who experienced sudden cardiac arrest, or the condition where the heart stops abruptly.

Under 1 percent of people studied experienced sudden cardiac arrest during (or immediately after) sexual activity, about 34 people out of the 4,500. Most of the incidents — around 94 percent — occurred in men around 60 years old on average, according to the study presented during the American Heart Association's Scientific Sessions meeting California on Nov. 12.

Women only accounted for two of the incidents.

Chugh said the results surprised him, but in reality sex isn't as aerobically challenging as some people believe. A 2011 study by researchers at Harvard found that sex is easier than working out on a treadmill — and the heart rates of the men in the study rarely rose above 130 beats a minute.

That's about equivalent to walking up two flights of stairs.

The more disturbing finding, according to Chugh and his team, was that other people who witnessed the sudden cardiac arrest, like a sexual partner, only performed potentially life-saving bystander CPR about one-third of the time. Bystander CPR happens when a witness performs CPR until medical personnel arrive — and it can double or triple a victim's survival rate, according to the American Heart Association.

"It stands to reason that if CPR is learned [and] performed by all sexual partners, there is a good possibility of improving survival," Chungh added.

So, it's probably a good idea to sign up for a CPR class before you get into your next relationship.

BOSTON EXAM FRAUD

US charges Chinese woman in college exam fraud

A Chinese college student was arrested Monday in the latest case to stem from U.S. inwestigations into international students who authorities say hire imposters to take exams on their behalf.

Xinyan Wang, a student at Lehigh Carbon Community College in Pennsylvania, on six different occasions since July took college entrance exams under other peoples' names, according to a criminal complaint filed in federal court in Boston.

Wang, 27, most recently on Oct. 20 in Boston took the GRE admissions exam for graduate school using a counterfeit Chinese passport and a visa in another person's name that contained photos that resembled her, according to charging papers.

Wang was arrested on charges that she committed visa fraud and used a false passport, according to court records.

Amid an increasingly affluent population, more Chinese students have been enrolling in U.S. colleges and universities.

Authorities said that in some instances they have identified schemes in which foreign students, unable to pass college entrance exams, hire imposters to take them in their place.

In May, federal prosecutors in Boston charged four women from China who they said sought to cheat on entrance exams used to gain admission to American universities and colleges. REUTERS

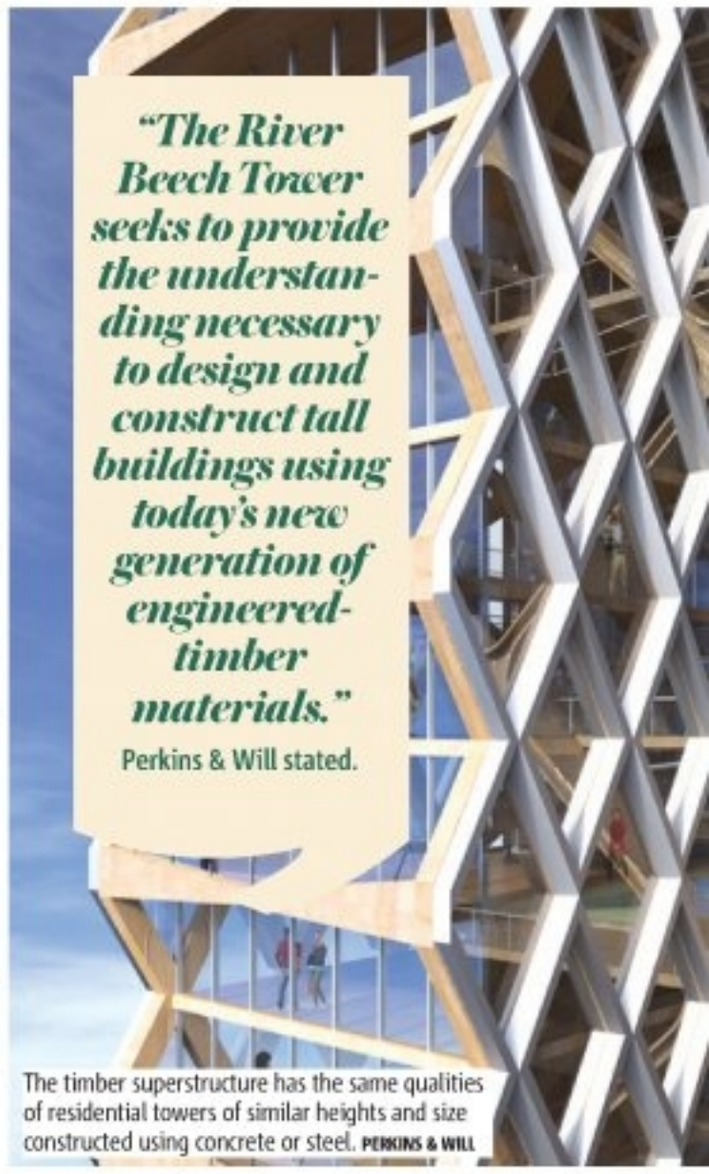
Wooden skyscraper

Timber tower on the Chicago River

When we talk about skyscrapers, we almost always think of huge structures made of steel and heavy materials. However, University of Cambridge has joined forces with global architecture firm Perkins & Will and the structural engineering company Thornton Tomasetti to develop a timber skyscraper dubbed River Beech Tower. The construction of this skyscraper, planned to be located close to the Chicago River, has less environmental impact than their steel or concrete counterparts. METRO WORLD NEWS

PERKINS & WILL



"The River Beech Tower seeks to provide the understanding necessary to design and construct tall buildings using today's new generation of engineered-timber materials."
Perkins & Will stated.

The timber superstructure has the same qualities of residential towers of similar heights and size constructed using concrete or steel. PERKINS & WILL

How to consolidate and refinance your student loans

Federal consolidation is a logistical move you do through the Department of Education. Refinancing is a financial move you do through a private lender.

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

There are two types of student-loan consolidation: federal and private. Private consolidation is often referred to as refinancing. These processes are often confused, but they're very different. Here's how:

Federal student loan consolidation is a logistical move you do through the Department of Education. You may need to consolidate to be eligible for some federal loan-repayment programs, but federal consolidation won't lower your interest rate or save you money.

Student-loan refinancing, which is also called private student-loan consolidation, is a financial move you do through a private lender. If you qualify based on factors including your credit score, you can save money by getting a lower interest rate.

Learn to manage your loans with lower payments. ISTOCK

Federal student-loan-consolidation basics

When you consolidate federal loans, the government pays them off and replaces them with a direct consolidation loan. You're generally eligible once you graduate, leave school or drop below half-time enrollment. Consolidating your federal loans through the Department of Education is free; steer clear of companies that charge fees to consolidate them for you.

Additionally, you'll get a new loan term ranging from 10 to 30 years. Your repayment term will generally start within 60 days of when your consolidation loan is disbursed and will be based on your total federal student-loan balance, among other factors.

How to consolidate federal student loans

Applying for consolidation takes most borrowers less than 30 minutes, according to the Federal Student Aid website. As part of the process, you'll need to provide details about your existing federal student loans, and choose a federal loan servicer and repayment plan for your new consolidation loan.

You have to complete the application in a single session, so do your research before you start. When you're ready, go to studentloans.gov and follow these steps to apply:

1. Select the federal loans you want to consolidate.

You can consolidate all your federal loans or just some of them. If you're a parent with PLUS loans and you also have other federal student loans, you may want to consolidate your PLUS loans in a separate consolidation loan; consolidating them with your other federal loans will make that consolidation loan ineligible for all income-driven repayment plans except income-contingent repayment. If you have Perkins loans, think twice before consolidating them; you'll lose access to Perkins loan cancellation if you do.

2. Choose a student loan servicer.

Federal loan servicers are private companies that manage federal loans for the Department of Education. You can choose one of four servicers for your new direct consolidation loan: FedLoan Servicing, Great Lakes Educational Loan Services Inc., Navient and Nelnet. If your loans are already with one of those servicers, you can stay or choose a new one.

3. Pick a repayment plan for your new consolidation loan.

On the standard repayment plan for direct consolidation loans, you'll make equal monthly payments for 10 to 30 years, depending on your total federal student loan balance. Alternatively, there are six other repayment plans to choose from, including four income-driven plans.

4. Complete and submit the application.

The remainder of the application involves filling in basic personal information and providing names of two references who have known you for at least three years.

After you review, sign and submit your application, continue making payments on your existing federal loans until your application has been processed. BRIANNA MCGURRAN & TEDDY NYKIEL

Are You Currently Working with Autistic Students?

Get your BCBA certification and take your career to the next level!

Autism is one of the fastest-growing developmental disorders in the US today. As this number continues to grow, the need for board-certified behavioral analysts with a specialty in autism continues to skyrocket with seemingly no end in sight.

The Cambridge College School of Education's top-rated Autism/Behavior Analyst program combines courses taught by expert faculty, 1500 hours of hands-on practicum time in an applied behavioral analysis (ABA) setting, and the support and individual attention needed to prepare students for the Board Certified Behavioral Analyst (BCBA) exam – one of the hottest credentials in the autism/behavioral field.

"Right now, there is a huge, unmet need for these professionals in schools, human service organizations and insurance companies throughout Massachusetts," says Cambridge College professor Dr. Robert Ross, a Licensed Applied Behavior Analyst (LABA) in Massachusetts and a Board Certified Behavior Analyst-Doctoral (BCBA-D), with over 30 years of experience working in early intervention, adult services and public/private school treatment settings. "If you are already working in the field - for example as a registered behavioral technician, behavioral therapist or aide – this program is perfect for you if you want to be a clinician."

Key benefits of the program include:

✓ Taught by renowned instructors, including Dr. Robert Ross and Dr. Joseph Vedora who are recognized as leading authorities on ABA and active practitioners in field.

✓ Proven track record of success with a pass rate of 87% for first-time exam takers (compared with the national average of 65%) and program ranked #17 out of 293 in the U.S. by the Behavior Analyst Certification Board.

✓ Students receive a master of education degree AND a certificate that prepares them to sit for the BCBA exam.

✓ Gaining a competitive edge in the job market by being trained by ABA experts and working in an ABA setting under an ABA supervisor while gaining real-life experience.

✓ Increases lifetime earning potential with salaries that can start at $70,000+.

✓ Geared toward adult learners who are already working in the field to help with work-life balance.

✓ A great education at a great value. Our program is affordable and financial aid is available. Students may even be eligible for tuition reimbursement from their employers!

Are you the next big music mogul?

NYU's Future Artists program is churning out the next wave of heavy-hitters in entertainment.

PAT KING
@MetroBOS
patrick.king@metro.us

The 2016 Future Music Mogul class posing with Pharrell Williams GREG LOCSIN

Artistic pursuits and the entrepreneurial spirit rarely coexist in perfect harmony. They seem to occupy two different regions of the brain that may as well have space the size of an airplane hangar in between them. Navigating the world of show business while being expected to produce a meaningful body of work can be nearly impossible. Only a select few can pull it off in a successful way (looking at you, Chance the Rapper). So, let's say you are an artistic person, how can you instill that cutthroat drive in your mind early on in order to bring your work to a mass audience?

NYU's Tisch School of the Arts has been helping high school students prepare to study the arts once they graduate with their Future Artists summer program. Started 30 years ago with their Future Filmmakers program, it has expanded in order to include programs such as Future Music Moguls and six other Tisch arts programs. The programs meet for 14 Saturdays every spring, with intense curriculums that mirror some of the classes the school provides to their first-year undergraduates.

"It's essentially a full semester class but only meeting once a week," says Patricia Pearson, the associate director, Special Reports at Tisch, "it gives you a sense of what it is really like to study the arts in college." As she explains, these programs were designed to give budding artists an introduction to a conservatory experience at a young age and to erase some of the daunting and scary aspects that can be associated with it. "We're really trying to show them that, yes these are very demanding and difficult things to study while in college," she says, "but at the university, there is a huge network of support from the faculty and your classmates to help."

Marat Berenstein, program director for future music moguls, notes that the amazing results this program manages to get out of their students make it a far cry from just a regular arts camp. Every year he makes his students both write and record their own songs and marketing strategies. The results have been spectacular. "Over the last few years, something has started happening," he says, "maybe it's just these kids are really talented. But more and more every year, these final projects are really good. Some of these are songs that are generating numbers on SoundCloud and Spotify!" In the past, the program has also had some A-list guests drop by such as Pharrell Williams and Kimbra.

One of his program's success stories is Candace Lee Camacho, who also goes by the stage name Duendita. Since finishing the program, Camacho has been chosen by Spotify to represent their new global campaign for their "Spotify for Artists" app and is currently in her senior year at the Clive Davis Institute. "If you're interested in music, it (the program) kind of makes it a reality," says Camacho, "it was really incredible."

Although this program meets in NYC, Pearson has seen many dedicated teens from all over sign up and make the trip to participate. "We've had kids come in from Delaware where they get up really early and their parents put them on a train," she says, "that's really the only requirement, is that they are able to get here on a Saturday … it's a commitment to study these fields."

Applications for 2018 are due on Nov. 15 for the Music Moguls program and Nov. 27 for all of the others. So, don't wait!

Automotive Technology: A Career Path to HIGH-DEMAND, HIGH-TECH JOBS

By all accounts, job openings in the automotive industry are plentiful. The only problem? Finding enough good people to fill them, according to David Protano, Chair of Automotive Technology and associate professor at BFIT. "It's not just technicians who are needed," Protano says. "It's automotive salespeople, parts specialists, service managers—all areas."

It's a matter of supply and demand. Many automotive workers are retiring, and not enough young people are entering this field to replenish the workforce. Others are leaving the field, partly because innovations in technology are driving major industry shifts.

"To be successful as a technician or in sales, you have to be familiar with the new technical dynamics in play," he says. For example, since new devices are smarter, more efficient and more varied, they're also more complex. Technicians need to use scanning devices to diagnose and repair a vehicle, and know how to read its data.

To keep up with industry trends, such as innovations in fuel alternatives, BFIT has expanded its course offerings to focus more on hybrid and electric cars. There's also more focus on diesel technology, since more manufacturers are using it in passenger cars.

BFIT students are prepared to hit their first job running, having trained on all makes and models in a live garage. The shop is not a simulation; it's run like any other full-service garage and is open to any and all customers—the only one like it in Massachusetts. "You read what do step by step, but when you do it hands-on, you understand how things work, how things fit together," says graduate Juan Franco.

Big-picture thinking also applies to the program's overall goals. "We want our students to graduate and be able to go right into an independent shop or dealership, move up the ranks and become a manager," says Protano. "The bachelor's degree takes students a step further and gives them management training so they can eventually open their own shop. The sky's the limit if they work hard and like to take on new challenges."

Ziga-zig ah! Spice Girls may be reuniting

Please let this be true.

Good news: The Spice Girls are apparently eyeing a reunion.

And because a Spice Girls reunion isn't a Spice Girls reunion with every damn Spice, Mel C. has reportedly been working with Simon Fuller — the girl group's former boss — to bring Victoria Beckham, Mel B, Emma Bunton and Geri Horner (née Halliwell) back together for a one-off special and a compilation record in 2018.

Every time there are talks of a reunion, Beckham — who, as Posh Spice offered the least, but now in 2017 is somehow the most famous of the five — shuts it down. Earlier this year, she said on the "Today" show that their reunion at the Olympics was basically enough. "I think you need to know when it's time to actually say, 'That was great, we achieved a lot' and everybody moves on."

Well, Posh, we must say — moving on is for suckers. Give the people what they want! Please?

Jenny Slate gushes about her BF

Jenny Slate is talking about her boyfriend on Twitter and it's totally Chris Evans, right?

In case you missed it, Slate and Evans — who gushed about each other tons after their breakup — have been spending lots of time together. Most recently, the "Captain America" star posted a video of his dog, uh, "singing" with Slate laughing off camera. So yeah, they're not exactly being coy.

Now Slate is tweeting nonsense about boyfriend and turtlenecks, so let's just call it official, eh?

"My boyfriend does many dreamy & generous things," she writes. "But number 1 in my mind right now is how he celebrates my new turtlenecks/lets me show him my online shopping spoils & cheers me on."

It's nice when two rich, conventionally attractive people like each other a lot and are thirsty about it. It's a good reminder that celebrities are just as basic as the rest of us.

Celebrities: They're just like us.

Marc Maron says Louis C.K. was a lyin' man

Celebrities are still reacting to last week's exposé on Louis C.K., in which he was accused by five women of sexual misconduct. Marc Maron, a longtime friend of C.K.'s, promised to address it on his podcast — "WTF With Marc Maron" — and he's kept good on that offer.

Thanks, Maron.
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

On the show's Nov. 13 episode, Maron said that he asked C.K. about the sexual misconduct rumors, and the "Louie" star dismissed them as just that: rumors.

"I would say, 'This story about you forcing these women to watch you jerk off, what is that, is that true?' He goes, 'No, it's not true. It's not real. It's a rumor.' … That was the conversation."

He went on to say that C.K. represents a larger problem in comedy. "It's hard to understand that that power dynamic is real and it exists, because things have been the way they are for a long time," he said.

Well, at least somebody knows what's up.

Whatever: Kylie Jenner could be engaged

Can't say we're very invested in this.

It's been awhile since we mentioned Kylie Jenner, but we suppose it's time to check in with the youngest member of the Kardashian-Jenner clan. Let's get this over with.

The 20-year-old shared a video on Snapchat of her driving her Bentley (of course) to Kim Kardashian West's baby shower (of course). And in the snap, she's sporting a rather excessive diamond ring which has people thinking — "Wait, is Jenner plotting a shotgun marriage? She so would."

A source confirmed to People that Jenner and her boyfriend, Travis Scott, are set to welcome a girl in February, officially igniting the nightmare fuel of our wildest dreams. But the social-media butterfly has largely kept mum on her accounts — and so far, she's had nothing to say about her new bling.

We are actually super-into this new Kylie Jenner, and we could get used to it. So, Kylie, keep it up! The less of you, the more mystery — and the less Kylie fatigue for us.

‘Future Man’ doesn’t take itself too seriously

Why the new Hulu series makes for easy watching.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

It’s up to these three to save the world. And the odds aren’t exactly looking great. HULU/ERIN SIMKIN “Future Man” is less “Preacher,” more “This is the End,” Seth Rogen- and Evan Goldberg-wise.

The series counts the two Canadians as its creators, and good thing: Not everyone can do a light take on an all-too-near dystopia. Premiering on Hulu on Nov. 14, “Future Man” is another entry into the time-travel genre, set apart mainly by its protagonist, Josh Futturman (Josh Hutchinson), a deadbeat janitor living with his parents. Futturman spends the majority of his time playing “Biotic Wars,” an unbeatable video game, and chronically masturbating, as one does. That is, until the day he beats the game.

That’s when two characters from “Biotic Wars,” Tiger (the delightful Eliza Coupe) and Wolf (“Preacher” star Derek Wilson) appear in his bedroom, hailing from the future and naming Josh their unlikely uppercase-S Savior. As you’ve probably guessed, shenanigans ensue. And, yes, many of them based in the sick wonders of various bodily fluids — blood, guts, and, well, let’s just call them unmentionables.

The actors are clearly having a lot of fun, and it shows. The series makes for an airy good time. There’s nothing wrong with it, exactly, but it’s missing a little oomph, despite very funny, very watchable performances from Hutchinson, Coupe and Wilson.

In fact, as charming as Hutchinson is as the loser turned unlikely hero, it’s Coupe and Wilson who shine the brightest, with their numerous barbaric ways feeling more tethered to the past than present. Watching them try to assimilate into 2017 is a consistent bright spot. And they’re able to mine a great deal of comedy out of so little — whether it’s snorting meth for the first time, cooking intricate “Barefoot Contessa”-worthy desserts or their insatiable thirst for murder and the consumption of sewer rats.

So if you’re looking for something enjoyable and easy to binge when you’re stuck on your family’s couch next week, “Future Man” is your best bet. But perhaps only if your family is good with Rogen and Goldberg’s trademark raunch. Otherwise, you’ll want to clear the room when — not really a spoiler — someone gets accidentally ejaculated on in the first episode. Totally up to you.

Julia Roberts and Jacob Tremblay in "Wonder."
ALL PHOTOS BY DALE ROBINETTE/LIONSGATE

Why the world needs a little 'Wonder' right now

"An act of kindness is almost a revolutionary act."

MATT JUUL
@RunTheJuuls
matthew.juul@metro.us

Whether it's on a playground or in the White House, bullying seems to rear it ugly head in every aspect of society these days. However, "Wonder" is here to remind audiences that kindness does still exist in the world.

The film, which opens in theaters this week, stars Jacob Tremblay as Auggie Pullman, a smart, "Star Wars"-loving kid who embarks on his first day of school. Despite the support of his sister (Izabela Vidovic) and parents, played by Owen Wilson and Julia Roberts, Auggie is worried that the other students will pick on him because of his cranial facial differences.

Although his first foray into middle school is filled with tears, setbacks and hardships, Auggie ends up inspiring the people in his orbit by refusing to be a victim and always extending a kind hand to others.

"Despite having been met with so many moments of unkindness in his young life, he still only manages to show kindness to other people," says R.J. Palacio, who wrote the award-winning book that inspired the movie. "If a boy like Auggie Pullman can find it in himself to be kind to other people, so can I."

At a time when bullying is on the rise and politics continues to divide, Palacio and director Stephen Chbosky believe "Wonder" is hitting the big screen at the perfect moment. They hope the film will inspire viewers to also choose empathy and tolerance over hate.

"We can all agree that we're not going to mean our way out of this problem," Chbosky says. "Right now, an act of kindness is almost a revolutionary act."

"We need to be talking about kindness on every level, whether it's political, whether it's what we expect of our leaders, whether it's what we expect and hope for parents in the community," adds Palacio. "They can not only change someone's day, they can really change someone's life with these little acts of kindness that just make the world better."

"Wonder" debuts in theaters Nov. 17.

When it comes to fostering kindness in children, Palacio and Chbosky agree that both parents and teachers play vital roles. Educators, in particular, are at the forefront in "Wonder," as Mandy Patinkin's Mr. Tushman and "Hamilton" star Daveed Diggs' Mr. Browne constantly push their students to reach for the stars and choose the right paths.

Chbosky, who also wrote "The Perks of Being a Wallflower" and directed its film adaptation, notes that he never would've become a writer if it weren't for the great teachers and mentors in his life, including "Rebel Without a Cause" screenwriter Stewart Stern.

"It took that special teacher to recognize in me, 'I think that you can be a writer,'" Chbosky says. "Those teachers make all the difference."

While teachers can affect kids in profound ways, that doesn't mean moms and dads aren't as important. Palacio believes parents should set good examples for their children, as well as others.

"To quote a great woman, 'It does take a village,'" he says. "We're not just parenting our own kids in our communities, we're looking out for each other's kids as well."

"Wonder" opens in theaters Nov. 17.

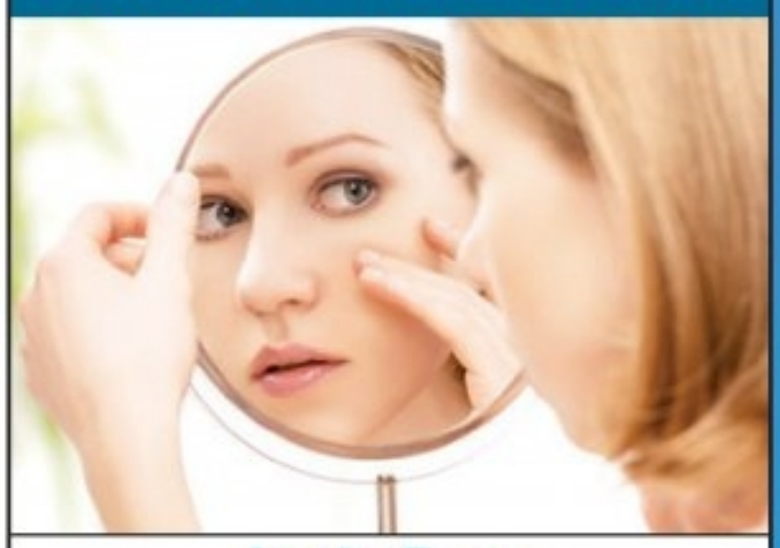
SEE YOURSELF IN AN INVESTIGATIONAL STUDY



Let's Face
ACNE
Together!

To qualify, you must be:
- 9 years of age or older
- Have moderate to severe acne vulgaris
- Have a minimum of 20-50 inflammatory papules and pustules face, 25 to 100 non-inflammatory lesions and no more than 2 nodules

foamix® Pharmaceuticals

We are currently conducting a clinical research study of an investigational topical treatment foam for those that suffer from acne.

There is no cost to enroll in the trial. Participants who qualify will receive study-related evaluations and medication at no cost. Insurance is not required to participate and compensation for travel and time may be provided.

In addition to any relief you may receive from the study medication you are assigned to use throughout this research study, your participation may also help to answer important questions regarding the safety and effectiveness of the investigational medication. This could provide new information about the treatment for acne, which may help other patients in the future.

If you or someone you know is interested in taking part in this research study, please discuss it with your family and talk to your doctor.

The American Society of Clinical Oncology establishes new links between moderate to heavy consumption and certain types of the disease.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

Drinking is bad for you. You know that already. In May, the American Institute for Cancer Research found that drinking as little as one glass a day increases women's risk of breast cancer. In August, a study published in JAMA Psychiatry declared alcohol abuse in the U.S. a "public-health crisis."

Now there is more bad news for fans of the bottle. A statement published last week in the Journal of Clinical Oncology reviewed the evidence and found more links between alcohol consumption and cancer. Here's one: 5.8 percent of cancer deaths worldwide are caused by alcohol.

When it comes to light-to-moderate drinking (defined by the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism as up to one drink a day for women, up to two for men), the American Society of Clinical Oncology noted that it can lead to an increased risk of breast cancer in women and esophageal cancer for men and women.

The greater risks are for the heavy drinkers (defined by NIAAA as those who binge drink five or more days in a month, with binge drinking defined as consuming four drinks in a sitting for women, five for men). The statement cited an increase in the risk of cancers of the oral cavity and pharynx and the liver, with a slightly lower increased risk for colorectal and pancreatic cancer.

If you quit drinking, does your risk of cancer decrease? In the case of the aforementioned mouth and throat cancers, studies suggest that "the risk of cancer may be reduced to that seen in never drinkers after long-term (>20 years) cessation from alcohol drinking," according to the ASCO statement. As for how cutting out drinking influences the risk of other alcohol-related cancers, more research is needed.

And if you smoke cigarettes in addition to drinking? According to the ASCO, "in cancers for which both alcohol drinking and cigarette smoking are causal factors, the cancer risks in those who are both alcohol drinkers and cigarette smokers are much larger than the risks seen for those who only drink alcohol or only smoke cigarettes," Examples of those include cancers of the oral cavity, pharynx, larynx and esophagus.

If you are a moderate drinker, this doesn't mean you have to completely swear off the stuff. Dr. Noelle LoConte, associate professor at the University Wisconsin-Madison. lead author of the statement, clarified ASCO's statement in an article for The New York Times.

"The message is not, 'Don't drink.' It's, 'If you want to reduce your cancer risk, drink less. And if you don't drink, don't start,'" she said.

Can Jaylen become the next Kobe?

Jaylen Brown's game and his stats are remarkably similar to Kobe Bryant's at this point in his career.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

Last year at this time we said that Jaylen Brown had the potential to be the next Kobe Bryant. That dabbling in hyperbole could soon turn into a legit conversation as Brown has jumped from a reserve who showed flashes, to a top-level NBA starter in just 365 days.

Last season, Brown averaged 6.6 points per game and this season he's more than doubled that so far, averaging 14.8 points per game through 12 games played. His rebounding totals have nearly tripled — from 2.8 per last season to 6.8 per this season.

That leap from Year 1 to Year 2 in the NBA was similarly dramatic for Kobe, who averaged 7.6 points per game in his rookie season and then averaged 15.4 points per game in his second year.

It wasn't until Year 4 of Kobe's career that he averaged over 20 points per game. But based on the tremendous growth by Brown this year, few would be surprised if he averaged around 20 ppg as soon as next season.

On the flip side — maybe, just maybe, Brown is already plateauing as player. Maybe he's destined to be the next Jeff Green instead of an all-time great. But at age 21, there seems to be an obscene amount of room for even more growth in the coming years from the riveting Brown.

Before using the eye test on the second-year man out of Cal, we'll throw the analytics folks a bone first. Brown was top three in the NBA in plus/minus just last week before having a minus-2 outing against the Hawks on Nov. 6. He bounced back on Wednesday against the Lakers with a plus-11, however.

Brown actually scored more points in the Hawks game (11) than he did in the Lakers game (9), but we've already seen multiple times this season that if Brown is having an off-night shooting, he's more than willing to make up for it in other areas.

Brown pulled down a team-high 11 rebounds in the win over the Lakers Wednesday night (key with Al Horford out) and grabbed a team-high 12 rebounds against the Thunder in the Celtics' most impressive victory of the season.

The numbers are impressive, so how about what the eyes are telling us?

Brown looks to be entirely more aggressive this season, consistently looking for his own shot — something that Celtics coach Brad Stevens has encouraged. He might be the best dunker in the league (much like Kobe was at age 21), and his outside shot is steadily improving.

If Brown can ever figure out a way to finish at the rim like Kobe, then he'll be well on his way to becoming a top 10 NBA talent. Yeah, that's a little like saying if Rajon Rondo could shoot he'd be Magic Johnson — but Brown has repeatedly shown the ability to fine-tune his game. He practically begged Danny Ainge to be a part of the Celtics' summer league roster despite having finished playing in the NBA playoffs just weeks prior, and he played in the NBA Africa Game and dominated.

One other Kobe comparison: Brown is quite eccentric. From an Undefeated piece this past summer: "[Brown] is an avid chess player, loves vegetarian food, is learning Spanish and how to play a guitar, interned with a venture capitalist while preparing for the draft, is a fan of NBA history and writes advice he receives from mentors in a journal. Hingeto, a website that enables fashion brands to crowdfund designs, is aiding Brown with starting an online hoops gear store with his own brand, a source said.

"Brown has dreams of being a future president of the NBAPA. The position is currently held by Houston Rockets guard Chris Paul."

The streak is alive

To call the Celtics red hot right now would be an understatement as they've reeled off 12 consecutive wins, the last one without the services of their best player, Kyrie Irving. Irving is questionable for tonight's game at Brooklyn as he's recovering from a minor facial fracture. Irving will likely wear a plastic mask for a short period when he returns. The Nets are a respectable group this year as they own a 5-8 record. Therefore it's no sure thing that the Celts would get this streak to 13 before Thursday's mega-showdown with the Warriors at the Garden.

Pats finally have the look of a 'special' team

The Patriots look like a complete team heading into the home stretch.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

Bill Belichick and the Patriots have always prided themselves on having one of the strongest special teams units in the NFL.

Year after year you'll hear the head coach stress the importance of "being strong in all three phases of the game — offense, defense, and special teams."

Tom Brady has been handling the offensive side of things just fine for quite some time, and while the defense has been less consistent over those years, it usually seems to show up when needed most. Certainly it has showed up as of late, as the Broncos became the fifth straight team that New England has held to under 20 points this season.

But as good as the Patriots offense looked Sunday night, and as stingy as the defense was, it was that third phase — the special teams — that changed the game from the very start.

After a Patriots three-and-out on the first drive of the game, Broncos punt returner Isaiah McKenzie muffed a punt that Patriots rookie tight end Jacob Hollister recovered at the Broncos' 24-yard line. Two Brady passes later and Rex Burkhead found the end zone for the Patriots.

Later that quarter, it was another Patriots running back showing up on special teams. Dion Lewis took a kickoff 103 yards down the Broncos sideline to make it 14-3, and the score sucked any momentum out of the Broncos after their field goal drive.

In the second quarter, Burkhead busted through the Broncos defensive line for a blocked punt that set the Patriots up for an eventual field goal and 20-6 lead. It was the third straight game in which the Patriots have blocked a kick. Cassius Marsh blocked a 37-yard field goal attempt against Atlanta and Lawrence Guy blocked a 51-yard field goal attempt against the L.A. Chargers.

It is those kinds of effort plays on special teams that show that players are buying in on the team after a slow 2-2 start to the regular season. Matthew Slater, Brandon King, Brandon Bolden, Nate Ebner, Jonathan Jones, and Patrick Chung are a handful of players who regularly shine on the unit.

And the Patriots as a whole aren't showing any signs of stopping, instead adding to their list of offensive weapons by signing tight end Martellus Bennett late last week and playing him Sunday night.

With the win — their second straight win in Denver, marking their first winning streak there since 1964-1966 — the Patriots improve to 7-2, including 4-0 on the road. Once again, they control the AFC East in what appears to be yet another layup division title.

Belichick moved into a tie with Tom Landry for third place all-time in wins with 270, and Tom Brady became the winningest quarterback on the road, earning his 86th road win and passing Peyton Manning in the process.

If Week 10 was seen around the league as a big week in determining which teams are the real deal and which ones aren't, the Patriots' 41-16 drubbing of the Broncos proves they are about as big of a threat as it gets. But don't expect them to take their foot off the gas.

"Even though we may have played well [Sunday] night, we're still not satisfied," Burkhead told reporters on Monday. "We know we're not where we need to be yet. We have a lot of room for improvement and a long ways to go."

CITATION GIVING NOTICE OF PETITION FOR REMOVAL OF A GUARDIAN OF AN INCAPACITATED PERSON AND/OR CONSERVATOR

Docket No. SU14P0756PM

Commonwealth of Massachusetts
The Trial Court
Probate and Family Court
In the interests of: Shirley Porter
Of: Roxbury, MA

RESPONDENT Incapacitated Person/Protected Person

To the named Respondent and all other interested persons, a petition has been filed by Christice M Porter of Houston, TX in the above captioned matter requesting that the court:

Suffolk Probate and Family Court
24 New Chardon Street, Boston, MA 02114

Remove the Conservator of the Respondent

The petition asks the court to make a determination that the Guardian and/or Conservator should be allowed to resign; or should be removed for good cause; or that the Guardianship and/or Conservatorship is no longer necessary and therefore should be terminated. The original petition is on file with the court.

You have the right to object to this proceeding. If you wish to do so, you or your attorney must file a written appearance at this court on or before 10:00 A.M. on the return date of 11/30/2017. This day is NOT a hearing date, but a deadline date by which you have to file the written appearance if you object to the petition. If you fail to file the written appearance by the return date, action may be taken in this matter without further notice to you. In addition to filing the written appearance, you or your attorney must file a written affidavit stating the specific facts and grounds of your objection within 30 days after the return date.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

The outcome of this proceeding may limit or completely take away the above-named person's right to make decisions about personal affairs or financial affairs or both. The above-named person has the right to ask for a lawyer. Anyone may make this request on behalf of the above-named person. If the above-named person cannot afford a lawyer, one may be appointed at State expense.

WITNESS, Hon. Brian J. Dunn, First Justice of this Court.

Aries Emotions will skyrocket when dealing with relationship issues. Stay calm, use your imagination and look for solutions that will benefit everyone involved.

Taurus Don't waste time arguing with someone who doesn't share your beliefs. Consider what you can do to make your life and future better.

Gemini Getting out and doing things that help to relieve stress will clear your mind and give you a chance to rethink your next move. Plan your actions carefully.

Cancer Don't let personal situations get to you. Concentrate on your work, personal growth and self-awareness. Now is not the time to get into a sensitive discussion.

Leo Plan a short trip, or get together with someone who understands you and share your thoughts and plans. Initiate a change before someone takes over.

Virgo Partnerships should be your priority. Discussing your life and what you want to achieve will help you gain support and encouragement from someone special.

Libra Channel your emotions and energy into something concrete. A plan that will help you get ahead or improve a situation at home would be a good place to start.

Scorpio A domestic change looks promising. Explore new ideas and develop plans that will help you get ahead. If you collaborate with someone, good things will happen.

Sagittarius Consider your options and get your facts straight before you make a move. Don't let anyone charm you into undertaking something that will be stressful.

Capricorn Stay calm and do what's expected of you. If you lash out or let your emotions get the better of you, it will affect the decisions you make. Think matters through.

Aquarius A good idea can turn into a lucrative pastime if you take time to develop and promote what you have to offer. Take care of your health and avoid excess.

Pisces Be careful when dealing with individuals who tend to ask for too much. Be prepared to offer solutions that don't involve your time or physical effort. EUGENIA LAST
